My conversation while sitting one to one while I was performing the skills competency for the for COVID-19 testing with the Florida Department of Health Representative, were purely inquisitive as I was there to complete the training and ask questions to best perform my job as a nurse. I always strive to perform my job to the very best of my abilities. Asking questions during in-person training events are how medical professionals learn to be better skilled.

My own opinions shared, were about my own two biological children that are currently enrolled in Miami-Dade County Public Schools. The Florida Department of Health Representative had no issue with our conversation and successfully signed off my completion of skills performed.

This was my statement of the events verbally and in writing that I provided on 12/02/2021.

Reviewing the Associate Handbook, there is nothing specifically stating that employees can not speak about their children nor ask questions during a training event. It is unfortunate the company feels I violated such code of ethics for asking questions as a medical professional.

Thank you,
